Barbie & Ken: Dance the Night Away

“You can be anything”

Barbie's iconic motto has resonated with generations, inspiring them to pursue their dreams and goals.

“Rockstars Barbies & Kens”

For SOSD, hundreds of Barbies and Kens flooded into the CTPH to watch other Barbies and Kens play good music and to have a good time. Our Barbies and Kens did not disappoint, blowing everyone away with their stage presence, flair and belting vocals.

“Barbies & Kens enjoying the performances”

The pink lighting turned the CTPH into a dollhouse, inviting all to show off their moves on the dance floor. Laughter, smiles, and adulation filled the room as the spirit of positivity flowed through the crisp air. Just a reminder in case you forgot: “You are Kenough!” Go and break open the classroom!

IFG

A Fighting Spirit

From 16 Aug to 20 Sep this year, athletes from NUSC represented the college in the annual Inter-Faculty Games (IFG). They fought valiantly with grit and passion in their respective sports, proudly flying the NUSC flag high. This season, NUSC finished in the top 4 in 10 different sports! Thank you to all our athletes for their hard work and passion!

ARTOBER

Where Creativity Takes the Spotlight

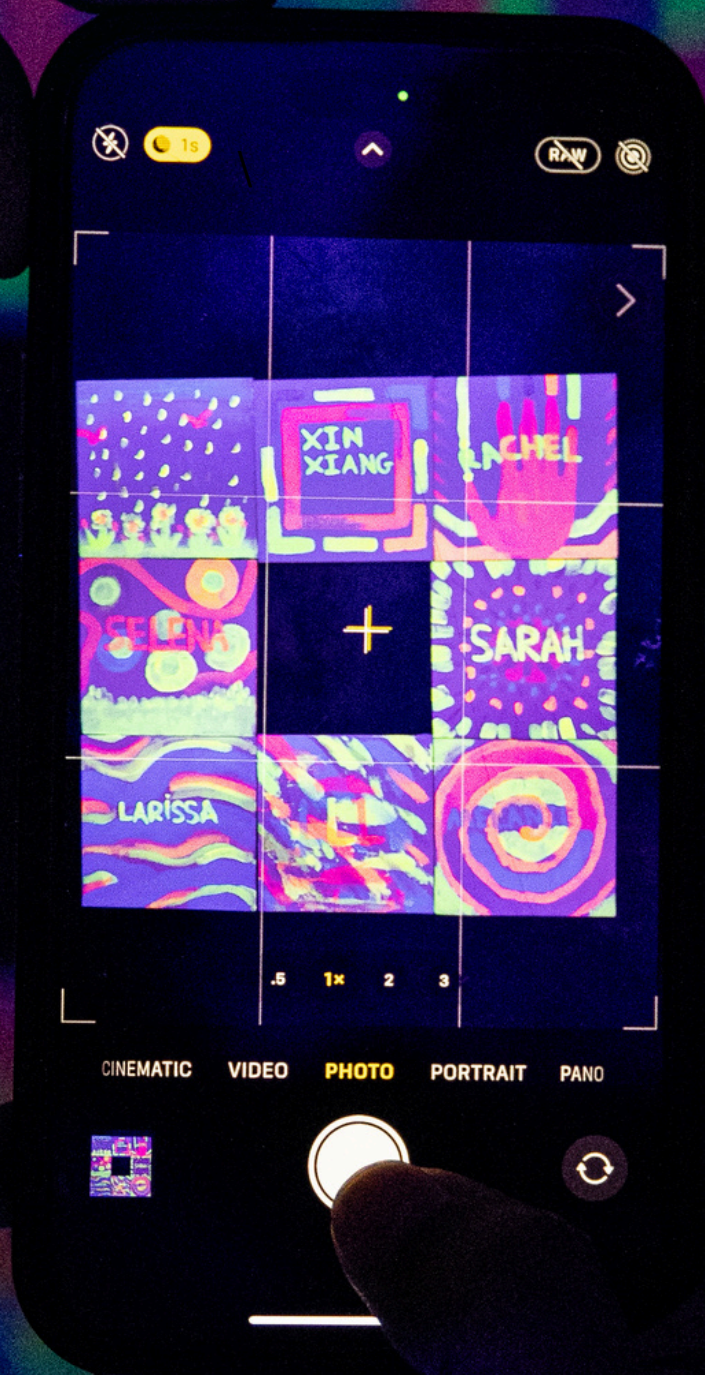

Artober this year,
creative individuals,
gathered in college.

To paint and to craft,
apple, keychains
and shrink charms,
and a Patrick Star.

Walls filled with photos, suite opened for all
to see,
magnificent sight.

All who walked away,
smile and laughter
on their face
a core memory.

Cracked

Artober is an annual month-long celebration of the arts held over the month of October. It aims to spark interest in the arts by providing a platform for arts-related student organizations and passionate individuals to hone their creativity and explore their art forms.

Shrink Charms

Coastal Painting

Apple Carving

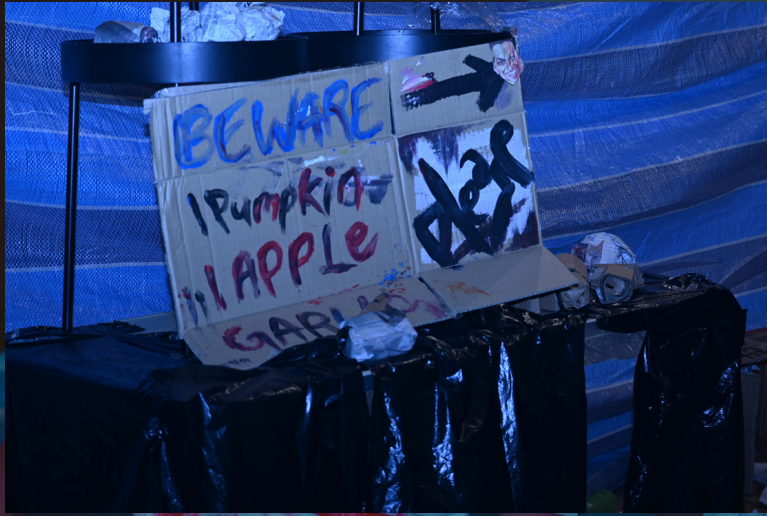

As a Ground-Up Initiative and Project (GUIP), Artober is a fully student-initiated event catered for other students. Any individual with a passion they wish to share with the wider NUSC community is welcome to start an activity, no matter the length or the scale!

Terror in the Aisles

The Halloween spirit descended upon the grounds of NUSC. Notice was sent out that an abandoned supermarket had taken the place of our beloved CTPH. As a brave adventurer, I knew that I had to explore the aisles, no matter the fear factor.

Beware of another GST increase

I gathered a rag tag team of fellow adventurers and waited with bated breath for our turn to enter. I peered through the glass doors and was only greeted with darkness and silence. I imagined myself as Dante, about to enter the Inferno, and could almost see his infamous line written on the exterior walls:

“Abandon all hope, ye who enter here.”

Finally, we were given the green light to discover the creatures which now inhabited the hardcourt. We were greeted with an array of limbs strewn across the floor, as a ghastly figure welcomed us to the supermarket. My heart popped out of my chest as a spirit appeared in front of us, pleading with us to buy apples from him.

As we turned the corner, a deformed ghoul appeared from beneath the counter. It walked like a spider, creeping towards us, threatening us with harm if we did not vacate the premises immediately. Realizing that we had overstayed our welcome, we bolted for the exit, not looking back, being glad to leave the horrors of that day behind us.

Children's Day Carnival

NUSC in Wonderland

The NUSC Residential Team brought the joy of adolescence back to NUSC with a Children's Day Carnival. The CTPH was turned into a wonderland, with treats like popcorn and candy floss being served, and students could try their hand at painting and making crafts.

Sitting down had never been this hard

Aside from the piñata and the musical chairs, the main attraction of the night was the bouncy castle. The alluring structure attracted all who wanted to relive memories of their childhood, jumping on and sliding down the castle.

“Thank you to the NUSC Residential Team for creating a night of fun where all could be children again!”

A Slumber Party

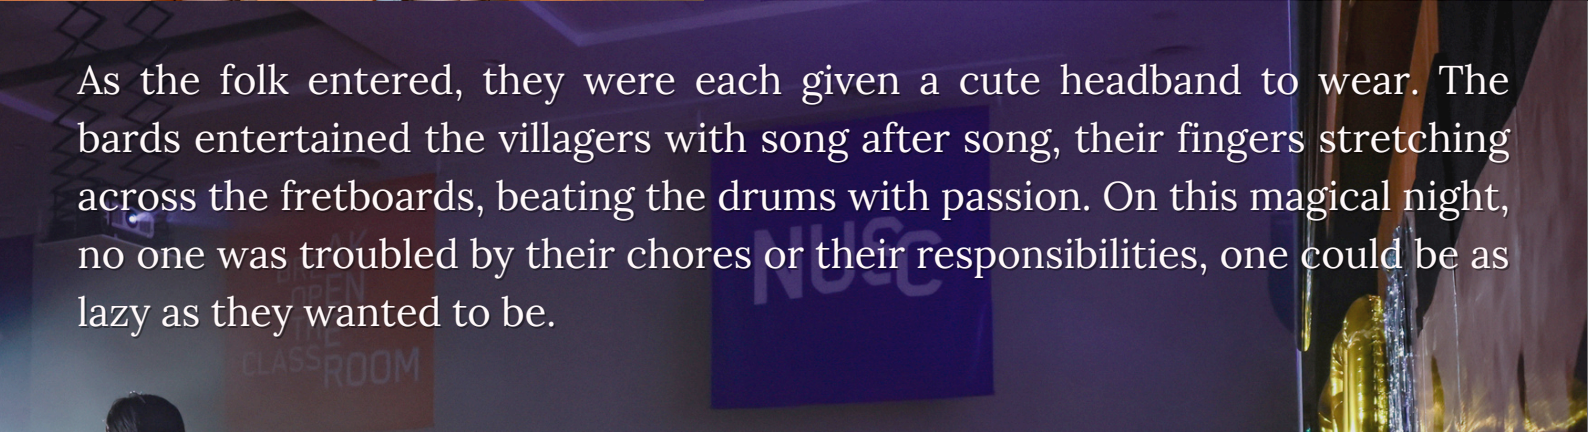

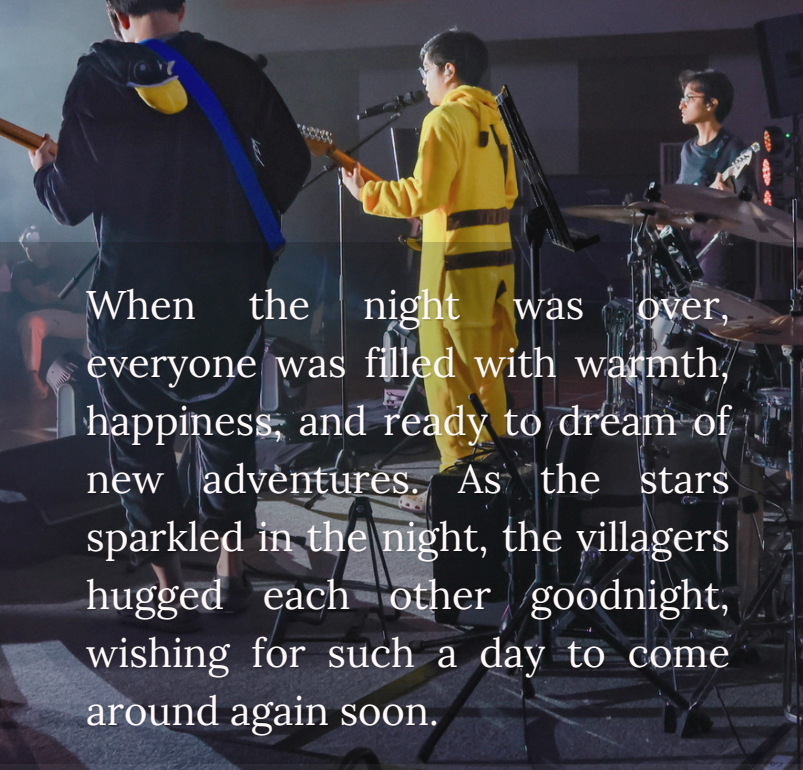

pen upon a time, in a small town known as NUS College, there was an event known as the End of Semester Dinner.

This year, the dinner was set to be a “PJ Party”. The inhabitants came dressed in their sleeping attire, wearing pyjamas and onesies, ready to fall asleep at the snap of a finger. A delicious dinner was served to the townsfolk, hearty and scrumptious. Then, they were gathered by the call of the bugle to enter the meeting hall, to view for the main event: performances by the bards.

As the folk entered, they were each given a cute headband to wear. The bards entertained the villagers with song after song, their fingers stretching across the fretboards, beating the drums with passion. On this magical night, no one was troubled by their chores or their responsibilities, one could be as lazy as they wanted to be.

When the night was over, everyone was filled with warmth, happiness, and ready to dream of new adventures. As the stars sparkled in the night, the villagers hugged each other goodnight, wishing for such a day to come around again soon.
